

PHILLIPS MUST PAY FOR FAILURE TO WED.

Fatherly Jury Assessed the Damage to Miss McDonough's Heart at $5,000.

Believed the New York Girl's Story of the Wealthy Contractor's Wooing.

THE DEFENCE A GENERAL DENIAL.

Girl's Father and Friends Testified in Her Behalf, While Phillips's Mother and Others Swore They Knew of No Engagement—Story of a Ring.

Good-looking Long Island contractors will probably fight shy of pretty New York milliners for a long time to come. This because a Queens County jury with bewildering whisks assessed Peter N. Phillips, of Long Island City, $5,000 yesterday for dallying with the affections of Miss Mamie McDonough, a pretty New York girl, who has been building dreams of bunnets for some years back at the Fifth avenue establishment of Mme. Kate Kelly, by appointment, etc., court milliner in London, Paris and Chicago, as well as in New York.

Peter N. Phillips is a young man on whom fortune has smiled freely and frequently, and only frowned once or twice. Mr. Phillips is one of the solid men of Mayor Gleason's ballistics. He has numerous city and country public works contracts, no end of horses and dump carts, real estate, personal property and a political "pull," which wasn't quite strong enough to land him in the State Senate when he ran at the election last year. Furthermore, he has a love of a pointed beard, ambrosial curls to rival Jove's own, and a cute little pointed nose. He also has an ambition to be Congressman, Assemblyman and other things of political prominence.

THE PLAINTIFF'S CASE.
The case of $5,000 damages for breach of promise, was begun in the Supreme Court room of Queens County Tuesday, Judge Dickson, to whom Congress the other day awarded a delayed medal of honor for gallantry before Petersburg, occupied the bench, and it didn't take long to get a jury eager to fairly adjudicate the matter in dispute. One of the jurymen looked so much like Lincoln that the Court stared at him. The rest looked like hard-headed men with daughters of their own—all except a curly-headed youth in the corner of the box, who resembled the defendant so closely as to invite inquiry as to their possible relationship. Attorney Louis J. Grant appeared for the fair plaintiff, and Attorney George W. Stevens for the defendant. The plaintiff said Tuesday that when Phillips asked her to be his wife she said "yes" and referred him to papa. Papa gave his consent. He said so on the stand yesterday. And so Miss Mamie McDonough fixed a date along in September, when she was to become Mrs. Peter N. Phillips. The wedding was to be at the Fifth avenue establishment of Mme. Kate Kelly, who, she said, had been building dreams of bunnets for some years back at the Fifth avenue establishment of Mme. Kate Kelly, by appointment, etc., court milliner in London, Paris and Chicago, as well as in New York.

AN ARRAY OF WITNESSES.
The plaintiff was attended by her father, her friend, Katie Richardson, and the Sharkeys, husband and wife, when she came into court yesterday. She wore a bonnet which reflected great credit on her milliner's skill and taste, and a plaid and white striped shirt waist with sleeves of airy tulle. She was pretty and a very refined looking girl.

Peter Phillips had his mother, two brothers, some sympathetic feminine neighbors, his friend, Mortimer Gleason, who lent the ring which Phillips gave her the day before and announced the date of her forthcoming marriage.

PHILLIPS DENIES ALL.
Then Peter N. Phillips took the stand, and he did so somebody remarked his resemblance to Ferdinand Wilkes, Mrs. Gleason's sweetheart. That was odd, for a few minutes Phillips was following out the Wilkes resemblance by proving himself the most adverse, unctuous and short-minded witness the Queens County juries had ever seen.

The defence made a denial of any engagement between Phillips and Miss McDonough, and Phillips averred that the alleged engagement ring, which belonged to his mother, had been loaned to the young woman at her request. He couldn't remember ever having taken her home and carried his love to a three-hour interview, as Miss McDonough had testified, and a denied having had the initials engraved on the ring. He averred that there was no box when he loaned the ring either, and informed that the witness had bought a box herself, had the initials engraved on it, and that she had loaned it to him. Phillips, her father and the Sharkeys to recount and utterly destroy him, Phillips. In an attempt to fix a date he said: "I remember that night, because I went out to see Kelly. I had a telegram from my mother in Chicago to see her." "So Kelly's a girl, is she?" from Attorney Grant. "Well, yes, Donovan wanted me to see about going to Regina." "Did you ever loan your mother's ring any other young ladies besides Miss McDonough?" "Well, I believe I did loan it once to a O'Brien, but then she's a sort of sister of mine."

Well, I believe I did loan it once to a O'Brien, but then she's a sort of sister of mine. Phillips's memory as to his recent business transactions—notably as to the assets that he had transferred property and withdrawn from certain banks—was not at all clear. He was finally obliged to admit that he was not a resident of Long Island City, and that he was unable to qualify in a considerable number of respects as to his signature. Phillips would not remember whether he had received an unmerciful grilling at the hands of Attorney Grant, and when he finally let off his dejected appearance a round of laughter, which the jury were in no hurry to suppress.

DEFENDANT'S MOTHER TESTIFIES.
Defendant's mother, Mrs. Margaret McDonough, a sister of the defendant, and a brother John, and his friend, Gleason, all denied any knowledge of Phillips's engagement to Miss McDonough, and admitted having frequently her company and that she was the visitor at the Phillips home. She blank against the Sharkeys on several occasions and decided that she gave her son a medicine in some sharp interrogations reflecting on his mental condition, and answered to questions. She said the ring in evidence was hers; that she had kept it in a safe, but that Peter was privileged to wear it when he chose. The last time she saw it the initials were not in it, and it wasn't in a green plush box. She had demanded the ring through counsel of Miss McDonough, but she didn't understand that her son had given it as an engagement ring. On the contrary she was satisfied that Peter loaned it to the girl, and she wickedly retained it. Miss McDonough, Mr. Sharkey and Miss Richardson were called in rebuttal of the defendant's witness and completed a strong case for the plaintiff.

The arguments of counsel took only fifteen minutes each. Mr. Stevens opened, asking the jury to believe that Phillips was the victim of a designing woman, and finished by asking the jury to protect Long Island young men by granting only nominal damages.

Attorney Grant waxed eloquent in his description of the shattered affections and damaged health of his client, and in his denunciation of Phillips. Judge Dickson weighed the evidence and instructed the jury in six minutes, and the twelve men did not. None of the parties to the case left the courtroom. All anticipated a quick verdict. In twenty minutes the jury returned a verdict awarding the plaintiff $5,000. Judge Dickson refused a stay of execution, ordered the defendant to pay a 5 per cent allowance to the plaintiff for attorney's fees, and assessed the costs on the Long Island Apolo.

MADE MAD BY LIQUOR.

Yorkieville Drank Carbolio Acid, Cut His Throat and Then Jumped from a Window.

Toney Yorkieville, a Polish upholsterer, twenty-four years old, living at No. 156 Wythe avenue, Williamsburg, made several desperate attempts to end his life yesterday, and is now in a critical condition in the Eastern District Hospital. He first swallowed nearly two ounces of carbolio acid, then cut his throat with a carving knife, and, lastly, jumped out of a second-

Yorkieville lived at the Wythe avenue address with his wife and two small children. For several weeks he has been drinking to excess. At daylight yesterday Mrs. Yorkieville was awakened by her husband. While she was dressing, Yorkieville made an attempt to strangle his wife. Mrs. Yorkieville screamed and Yorkieville then ran to a closet, and grabbing a bottle containing the acid, swallowed it.

"Now, see what I've done," said the crazed man, and, seizing a carving knife from the kitchen table, he drew it across his throat as the blood spurted from the wound Yorkieville fell to the floor. Mrs. Yorkieville ran screaming from the room, and called for her children, who had been awakened.

Yorkieville, weak as he was from loss of blood, managed to stagger to his feet and throw himself head foremost, out the street from an open window. He fell thirty feet, landing on his side. Mrs. Yorkieville and her children had this time reached the sidewalk, and seeing the almost lifeless body of her husband lying near the stoop, she fell into a faint.

Yorkieville revived and made an effort to wade the gash in his throat. Ambulance Surgeon De Gregor removed the man to the hospital. He cannot recover.

CAUGHT GLEASON'S SETTER.
Dog Catcher Lee Was Taking the Animal to the Pound When the Mayor Awoke.

"Corky" Lee, the dog catcher, who for a long time has been a terror to the residents of Long Island City, again distinguished himself Tuesday night in a way which even surprised Mayor Gleason.

At a late hour the Mayor was seated in front of his office on Front street and beside him sat his favorite Irish setter, known as "Nigger." Every man, woman and child in Long Island City knows "Nigger." Shortly before midnight Dog Catcher Lee, who had been reappointed the afternoon by Mayor Gleason, came along just as the Mayor was dozing in his chair. Some of the Mayor's friends, who were standing in front of the hotel, stopped Lee and told him he would get into trouble if he took the Mayor's dog away. There came near being a general fight, when Mayor Gleason heard the noise, and hurried down to the corner. Lee had "Nigger," leading him by a rope.

"That's my dog," thundered the Mayor; "leave him go."

"I don't care if it is your dog," responded Lee. "You had no license, and I am going to take him to the pound."

Mayor Gleason became very angry, and as he reached out for the dog Lee, who had latter agreed to let "Nigger" go, provided Mayor Gleason would apply for a license in the morning.

Long Island Road Bonds Sold.
At a meeting of the Queens County Board of Supervisors in Long Island City yesterday, Series B, of the Hoffman Boulevard bonds, amounting to $70,000, and Series C, of the North Hempstead turnpike bonds, amounting to $80,000, were disposed of to the bondholders of the New York City and Hudson River Railroad Company.

The former were sold at 103.20, and the latter at 103.50. There were only a few bidders.

Colored Church Convention.
Bishops, Clergymen and Laymen to Meet in Brooklyn to-day.

There will assemble in Brooklyn to-day the bishops, general officers and distinguished laymen of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. The occasion will be the annual convention of the New York conference, and the meeting place will be the Bridge Street Church, of which Dr. George T. Watkins is pastor.

Besides the bishops and general officers of the church, there will be present the pastors of a large number of churches in this State, with visiting ministers from the adjoining States and foreign delegates from other conferences. A committee of women has been appointed to care for the visitors, and the prospects are that this year's conference will be the most successful one held in the history of the church.

BEECHER TELLS HIS STORY ON THE STAGE.

Insurance Agent Adopts a Device to Get Business but Gets into Court.

Wrote a Policy for a Man Who Did Not Want It and Would Not Take It.

ONE PART OF THE ACT CALLED FORGERY.

Defended by His Brother, Who in Some Moments Resembles Their Father, Who Was Brooklyn's Most Famous Preacher.

The prosecution of Colonel Henry Barton Beecher, who was the favorite son of Brooklyn's famous divine, Henry Ward Beecher, had less than the best of yesterday's testimony. The trial of Mr. Beecher on an indictment for forgery progressed in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, New York, so far as the conclusion of the evidence for the State before the noon adjournment, and W. C. Beecher, who is one of his brother's counselors, moved to dismiss the indictment.

He set up that the alleged forgery of the name, "P. S. Bond, V. P. per A. S. B. P. S.," on an application for casualty insurance, purporting to come from the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway through the agency of Beecher, Schenck & Co., to the now defunct American Casualty and Security Company, was not the corporate act of the railway company.

It was not the signature of the vice-president, had not the seal, and only purported to have been signed by some one for the vice-president. He contended that "A. S. B. P. S.," had not been defrauded, nor had F. S. Bond, nor the railway company. He also contended that no fraudulent intent had been shown by the State against his brother, but that the State's case proved that at the last time the insurance company was examined prior to its failure a surplus of $100,000 was shown of which only $55,000 could have been on the books as a consequence of the creation of an asset by the alleged fraudulent application.

Lawyer Beecher became very earnest as he progressed in his argument. He is tall, thin, and his white muston-chop whiskers, his not too recently shaven square chin was thrust out combatively, and his full lips folded and unfolded after the manner of his father's lips in moment of oratorical enthusiasm. The likeness was only superficial. Mr. Beecher's voice is shrill, his gestures words lawyerly, and his style that of legal documents.

The long argument ended in the motion to dismiss being denied. David N. Cavallo, an expert on handwriting, had been on the stand and had said that letters shown him acknowledged to have been written by Henry Barton Beecher were written by the same person who signed the application alleged to have come from the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, with the name "P. S. Bond, per A. S. B. P. S."

Mr. Beecher went on the stand in his own behalf and denied that he had written the Bond signature, or that he knew who did write it. He had ordered his manager, Francis Burke, to make out a policy, and had written some memoranda for the application. He had been negotiating with Mr. Bond to sell him casualty insurance, and as formerly he had got Mr. Bond to accept a fire policy after it was written out—though Mr. Bond had said he would not accept it—he had adopted the same tactics to secure the casualty business of Mr. Bond's railway. In this case Mr. Beecher had written the application, and Mr. Bond had given a company to carry its own casualty insurance.

Beecher's examination continues to-day.

KLEIN'S DEFENCE BEGINS.

Evidence Introduced to Show That He Was at a Lodge Meeting on the Night of the Fire.

The prosecution having introduced some new witnesses to tell the old story regarding the crime of arson alleged to have been committed at No. 74 Johnson avenue, Brooklyn, the home of Jacob Klein, on June 30, 1894, rested at noon yesterday, and Klein's lawyer, Robert H. Elder, took up the case for his client. It was the third day of the second trial of the hollow-eyed tottering little man, who was indicted jointly with Adolph Hirschkopf for arson.

Mr. Backus placed upon the stand in the morning Fyrrne Fiehlberg, who swore he had heard Klein and Adolph Hirschkopf talking of a policy, and that a fire, and had afterward been told by Klein: "To-night there is to be a fire at my house."

Mrs. Sarah Silbermeister, who is serving a term of twenty-five years in Auburn on a charge of arson, was the next witness. She said she and Louis Rothman had gone to Klein's house together to fire it. They had done so.

Joseph Braun and Meyer Brenner gave testimony similar to that given at the former trial and the prosecution rested. Lawyer Elder's opening address was short.

Morris Dantsiger, who recommended Hirschkopf to Klein as an insurance agent and later as a fire adjuster, told his story, and Abraham Benfeldt, the secretary of the secret society of which Klein was president, testified that the defendant was at a meeting in Ridge street on the night of the fire.

Two other witnesses testified that Klein was at the lodge meeting. One of them was Zachariah Sudler, who had testified on the former trial that Shuler Rosenbaum and Meyer Brenner had threatened Klein in the jail. Mr. Backus objected to the admission of this testimony yesterday and was sustained. This caused his opponent to make an emphatic protest.

The trial was adjourned to this morning.

STORM AT CONEY ISLAND.

Concert Halls Flooded and a New Hotel Nearly Blown Down.

Coney Island was pretty well storm tossed yesterday by both wind and rain. The streets were flooded, owing to the defective condition of the sewers. All performances given in the open air were forced to close for the day, and all the scenery in the Captain Paul Barton chateaus grounds was absolutely wrecked. A new hotel, at the corner of Surf avenue and Thompson's Walk, partly collapsed, and had to be braced up. Many concert and drama halls were flooded, and the guests at Manhattan Beach and other resorts were compelled to stay indoors to be assured of comfort.

Pretty Jennie Kodzieson Now Seeks to Have Her Marriage Annulled.

Jennie Kodzieson, an attractive eighteen-year-old brunette, living with her parents at No. 233 Graham avenue, Williamsburg, was married a week ago to George Gafney, nineteen years old, of No. 205 Egan street. The ceremony was performed by Civil Justice Schultze, in the Lee Avenue Court.

Yesterday the young bride, accompanied by her mother and a younger sister, visited by her mother and a younger sister, visited the court room. Mrs. Gafney was weeping. "I have come to have my daughter's marriage annulled," said Mrs. Kodzieson. She was told that her daughter would have to go to the Supreme Court.

It appears that after the ceremony Gafney left his young bride to go to his work, promising to return to her early that evening. He failed to do so, and since that time Mrs. Gafney has seen her husband, she says, but twice, and then for only a few minutes. She had prepared everything at her mother's home for housekeeping.

Why Gafney deserted his young bride is not explained. Their courtship was brief, and they appeared greatly attached to each other before the marriage. Gafney is still living with his parents.
